

ART WORLD

16 Must-See Summer Shows Featuring Queer Artists

Rain Embuscado, Friday, June 24, 2016

Terence Koh, bee chapel (2016). Image: Courtesy of Andrew Edlin Gallery.

4. Terence Koh, "Bee Chapel"

Terence Koh emerged from his self-imposed retirement earlier this year, and his return from the mountains of upstate New York yielded "Bee Chapel." His exhibition, which takes over Andrew Edlin's new gallery space in the Lower East Side, offers up a curious mix of sculptures, works on paper, and, of course, the imposing bee chapel installation.

As Kevin McGarry noted in his review for the New York Times, Koh, once the art world's "enfant terrible," has since changed his tune, advancing "ecological" concerns—namely the dwindling bee population and its environmental impact. And just this month, Koh paid a special tribute to the victims of the Orlando shooting by broadcasting their names into outer space.

WHERE: Andrew Edlin Gallery, New York

WHEN: Through July 1, 2016